Fishing remains slow given the time of year and number of fish we are marking. Last night was slow again. Fished with two other boats and only had 10 fish between the three of us. We were back out this morning and it looked to be even worse. We were setting on one fish and running out of time when we finally found a small group of active fish. We worked the area hard and took four more fish before the boat traffic picked up and the fish turned off again. Mark and I enjoyed the morning with a great couple from Bay City. Charlie was fast to the rods and did an excellent job spotting bites and landing fish. Julie even got in on the action and took a nice King too. The low point of the day was having our leadcores run over for the third day in a row!! I don't know if people aren't paying attention, don't care or just don't understand but it is starting to get expensive!!
